Judy Petrantoni Arrested For Illegally Taking Son

By LYNNE PERRI
Sun Staff Writer

Extradition hearings were expected to begin today for the return of Judy Caranna Petrantoni, a 22-year-old city woman arrested Wednesday in Washington, D.C., and charged with illegally removing her son from a state foster home.

Her 2-year-old son Christopher had been placed in a Clearwater foster home last October pending a child-abuse investigation by the state attorney's office and the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services.

Foster care was ordered after doctors reported bruises on Christopher's back and thigh that they said could not be explained adequately by his parents.

HRS officials were expected to fly to Washington today for a hearing in juvenile court.

HRS officials have informed Gov. Reubin Askew of the case, and he reportedly has asked to be kept abreast of the situation.

The warrant for Mrs. Petrantoni's arrest was teletyped Wednesday afternoon to Washington by the Pinellas County Sheriff's Department and she was arrested in her hotel room at 5 p.m.

Mrs. Petrantoni, who spent the night in a Washington jail, still was being held on $5,000 bond this morning, sheriff's department spokesman Merrill Stebbins said.

Christopher has been placed in foster care by the Department of Human Resources in Washington.

He is taking medication daily because of severe head, arm and eye injuries he sustained after falling from the sixth floor of the Holiday Inn On the Beach last summer.

Washington police said the infant was in good condition. However, his mother had taken Christopher to a children's hospital in Washington for further tests because she said she could not get adequate care in Pinellas.

Mrs. Petrantoni said her daughter Stephanie, who lives at 430 Windward Passage on Island Estates with her two step-brothers and step-father Angelo S. "Butch" Petrantoni, would join her soon.

Wednesday, Petrantoni flew to Washington to be with his wife. On probation after pleading no contest in 1976 to a county zoning bribery charge, Petrantoni said he had permission from his probation officer to remain in the capital for two weeks.

He said he is determined to take the custody case to the FBI if necessary and charged that local officials were persecuting him because of his past.

"They're not going to get away with this anymore," he said. If extradition could not be avoided, "I'll jump my probation and take my family to Costa Rica."

An angry Judy Petrantoni rushed into the unlocked foster home Saturday afternoon, snatched her son and fled to her car parked nearby, police said.

She repeatedly has denied abusing her son and HRS officials in December labeled the relationship between mother and child "positive."

However, after the unexplained bruises in October raised suspicions of child abuse, Christopher was ordered to remain in foster care until this summer when the case was expected to be reviewed.

Mrs. Petrantoni Arrested In Georgia

By LAURIN MARCH
and LYNNE PERRI
Sun Staff Writers

A young mother sought by Pinellas County law enforcement officials for allegedly taking her son from a state foster home has been charged with speeding and fleeing from police officers in Gwinnett County, Ga.

Judy Caranna Petrantoni, 430 Windward Passage, was arrested about 5 a.m. Thursday after a chase through four Georgia counties at speeds up to 95 miles per hour, said Jerry Poole of the Georgia State Police.

Mrs. Petrantoni, 22, and her husband Angelo S. "Butch" Petrantoni were returning to Florida after Mrs. Petrantoni waived her right to an extradition hearing in Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Petrantoni had taken her son Christopher to the capital after apparently snatching him from a Clearwater foster home. Christopher has since been returned to the state by officials of the State Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services (HRS), who have placed him in another foster home.

The chase apparently started after the couple pulled into a service station off Interstate-85 in Banks County. They got $12 worth of gas and left without paying, Poole said. The station attendant called police, who stopped the Petrantonis shortly thereafter.

While police questioned Petrantoni outside of the vehicle, his wife, who police had left in the passenger seat, started the car and drove away. She led police 25 miles through Banks, Jackson, Barrow and Gwinnett counties before she was apprehended.

Poole had heard radio broadcasts from pursuing officers and was waiting for her at the I-85 intersection with Georgia Road 20. He said he had to maneuver his vehicle in front of hers before she would stop. When he got out of his car she again tried to flee, he said, smashing the rear of his car and striking a passing motorist, whose car blocked hers from further escape, about 20 minutes after the chase had begun.

"I can see that you folks don't know how to drive," Poole said Mrs. Petrantoni told him after her arrest.

Mrs. Petrantoni's son had been placed in foster care last October while the state attorney's office and HRS officials investigated the possibility of child abuse.

The child, under medical care after falling from the sixth floor of a Clearwater Beach hotel last summer, will be two years old Tuesday.

Mrs. Petrantoni is in Milledgeville, Ga., Central State Hospital under court order, according to sheriff's deputies in Gwinnett County. Her husband said she was recovering from exhaustion and a miscarriage. Mrs. Petrantoni was four months pregnant.

Petrantonis don't take their woes lying down

By SUSAN DENLEY
St. Petersburg Times Staff Writer

From threatening to create an international incident in sophisticated Washington to kicking up a ruckus in cracker Georgia, Judy and Angelo Petrantonis were busy last week.

It was a study in contrasts — but not surprising to those who know the Clearwater couple's flair for the dramatic grand gesture.

Early in the week, the Petrantonis made the rounds of government offices in Washington trying to win aid in their fight to have their 20-month-old son returned to them from foster care. To anyone willing to listen — even an assistant deputy at the Russian consulate — they told the story of the Pinellas power-wielders who they say have conspired against them.

THEY WENT to the Russian consulate, Petrantonis told a reporter in a telephone call, "to make an international incident."

At midweek, the Petrantonis were arrested in rural North Georgia for allegedly shorting a gasoline station attendant by $1 and trying to elude police in a high-speed chase. Petrantonis posted a cash bond that also serves as a fine. But his 22-year-old wife was ordered to a state psychiatric hospital by a judge, a slightly amused Lawrenceville, Ga. police spokesman said.

In Pinellas officialdom, there are some who are amused, others who wince at the mention of the Petrantonis. The Petrantonis have been nothing but trouble to many local officials.

First off, a firm owned by the bearded, beefy Petrantonis and other family members was at the center of a Clearwater City Hall scandal in 1975 in which three high-ranking city officials lost their jobs. The officials allegedly allowed thousands of dollars in overpayments to the Petrantonis' firm under a utility-line contract. Two of the employees were later reinstated.

THEN PETRANTONIS and his father were arrested and charged with bribing a county zoning technician and with perjury. After an initial mistrial, both later pleaded no contest in exchange for probation.

Ever since the city and county scandals came to light, the Petrantonis have loudly proclaimed their innocence. They were framed, they say, by powerful political forces in Pinellas County.

Specifically, they blame George Ruppel — wealthy banker, onetime county commissioner and longtime political mover who also was their partner in a limerock mine in Pasco County. They say Ruppel, through Pinellas-Pasco State Atty. James T. Russell, is persecuting them to gain control of the mine and run them out of the state.

Russell and Ruppel have denied the allegations. But that hasn't stopped the tenacious Petrantonis from writing to the FBI, picketing on the steps of the Pinellas County Courthouse and trying to get an appointment with President Carter to complain about them.

RUPPEL AND THE Petrantonis are slugging it out in federal court, where Ruppel is trying to foreclose liens he placed against the mine, win back money he lent the Petrantonis and fend off the IRS, which is claiming about $170,000 in back taxes and Social Security payroll deductions the Petrantonis allegedly never paid.

(IRS closed the mine because of the unpaid taxes, but it is now being operated by a company under a lease.)

Ruppel's claim is based on more than $1-million in loans he personally extended to the Petrantonis to help them run the mine from June 1972 — when he was introduced to the family by County Commission Chairman Charles E. Rainey — until 1975, federal court records show.

Although it is Ruppel who is out $1-million, Angelo Petrantonis sees himself as the victim.

AND THE spicy-tongued, flame-tempered Petrantonis never gives up fighting.

Now his fight is centered around his 20-month-old son Christopher.

Christopher came to officials' attention last July when he fell from a sixth-floor balcony at a Clearwater Beach motel. Severely injured, he survived, and his mother filed a $1-million damage suit against the motel.

The State Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services (HRS) and Russell's office investigated the unusual incident for possible child abuse, but no charges were filed, and Christopher was returned to his mother.

In October, Christopher was readmitted to Morton F. Plant Hospital in Clearwater with bruises and other injuries that his parents say were suffered in a seizure related to his fall. His mother was also admitted — to the hospital psychiatric ward. Doctors diagnosed her as schizophrenic — a diagnosis she believes is part of a conspiracy. She was released from the hospital when doctors decided she was not dangerous.

BUT ON THE advice of two pediatricians, Christopher was released to HRS pending a child-abuse investigation. He was placed in a foster home by a judge's order, with the case to be reviewed in June.

The Petrantonis insist Christopher was taken from them because of "politics." They have written letters to elected and appointed officials in Tallahassee and Washington pleading for help.

Two weeks ago, Mrs. Petrantoni found Christopher's foster home and forcibly took him. She was arrested a few days later in Washington and released on bail. Christopher was returned to foster care.

The Petrantonis' trip to the Russian consulate was made, Angelo said, to draw attention to his plight.

"IF WE DON'T get any help, we are going to make an international incident of the joke of President Carter's stand on human rights," Petrantoni said, adding, "We will be happy to move to Russia.

"As far as I'm concerned, to hell with the United States . . . or with any country that would use a baby to play political games."
